Guerrillas near North Bend-The Ohio and Mississippi Train At-that during Friday might a party of guerrilas from Kentucky had crossed the Ohio river and made a raid on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad, near North Bend.

The regular eight P. M. express train on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad, left the depot in this city at the usual hour, bound for St. Louis. It was composed of four passenger coaches, a baggage car, and the Adama express car. The train was heavily loaded with passengers, quite a number of them being indice. About seventeen miles and a half from Cincinnati, and between the stations known as Gravel Pit and North Bend, the locomotive ran from the track, and tipped over on one side, the care following in a promiacuous smash up. The Adams express car and the baggage car were capsized with the engine, and both badly damaged. The first passenger coach stove through the end of the baggage car, producing considerable havec. The remainder of the train was not severely injured and kept the track. The first passenger coach stove through the end of the passengers the idea that it was an ordinary railroad accident, but the voiley of firearms, and the shouts outside, which followed immediately after, undeceived them, and the nature and cause of the mishap begame palpaly evident when two desperadoes made their appearance at each car, and backed by two more who kept guard outside, commenced pillaging the passengers.

Subsequent developments have revealed the plan pursued by the guerrillas in capturing the thrain, and show that considerable skill was manifested in its design. manifested in its design. The band, numbering about twenty, crossed in skiffs from the Kentucky shore, some time during the day, and made their arrangements to attack the night express train to St. Louis, probably, as information they may become possessed of, as being the one which might best repay them, to their whereabouts.

ALFRED GAITHER,

being the one which might best repay them, robbery being their only object.

They selected a spot where the track of the road runs in close proximity to the river, and simply displaced one of the rails, not tearing up ten or a dozen as one of our morning cotemporaries has it. The advancing train, when it reached the place, was, as we have seen, thrown violently from the track; and as soon as the first crash was over, the guerrillas, who were armed with navy revoland as soon as the first crash was over, the guerrillas, who were armed with navy revolvers, fired a volley over the cars, and with oaths, warned the passengers not to make any demonstrations or they would have their brains blown gut.

While everything was wild with confusion in the received as the description.

in the passenger coaches, the desperadoes entered, and with the vilest oaths, demanded the money and valuables of the passengers. One of the party delivered himself of the following chivalrons sentence as he entered one lowing chivalrons sentence as he entered one of the cars: "Rob every d—d man, but don't hurt the ladies." The plundering was very general and thorough. Few, save the coolest, succeeded in saving any thing in the line of money and valuables. Gold watches, pocket-books, diamond pins, and money packages changed bands in remarkably quick time. One soldier returning home, was robbed of three hundred dollars, and silkness. time. One soldier returning home, was rebbed of three hundred dollars; and although he begged hard to be permitted to retain a portion of the money, the villians took all.
Another individual was relieved of a gold watch, and five hundred dollars in greenbacks.
Still another lost two hundred dollars, besides a watch and valuable breastpin. The conductor, Mr. Shephard, had forty dollars taken from him; but, by cutting the lining of his cont-pocket and allowing the contents to drop into the skirt, succeeded in saving $320. The engineer likewise lost a valuable watch. We are unable to give any statement of the ag-while the work of robbing was going on in the passenger coaches, five of the villains plundered the express car. This car, as we have stated, was capsized and badly surashed up, and in such a way as to completely imprison the messenger, Mr. Pierce, who, after the accident thrusting out his bead from a small complete. opening, to see what was going on outside, was greeted by a lond oath from a desperado atanding near, who threatened to blow off the top of his head if he did not get back. The party with the aid of an ax, soon cut their way into the car, and drew out the money sales, three in number. They demanded the keys three in number. They demanded the keys from the messenger, under pain of death, but two of the safes being through from Cincianati to St. Louis, he was only able to open for them the local safe. The others they blew open with gunpowder, having vainly endeavored, to force the doors with the ax. The amount lost by the Express can not be accurately stated, but it was not very large. There is known to have been some seven three board out of the valuables. ty bonds and other valuables. The mail and baggage, we understand were not molested, and are consequently safe.

The guerrillas were all, save one, dressed in citizens' clothes, and were remarkably villainous in bearing and action. One of the party they addressed as Lieutenant, and another as Captain. They carried no arms but revolvers, and these they were constantly flourishing around in the most threatening possible.

After pillaging the train, the party made for the river, and it is supposed crossed immediately to the Kentucky side.

The passengers hailed the C. T. Damont coming to Cincinnati, and twenty-five or thirty took passeage. At 12 o'clock the train from St. Louis arrived at the wreck, and the remainder of the passengers were transferred immediately.
